Signed Photographs of World Notables Cover Screen Which Belonged to King Edward

In the early days of King George's illness a folding screen was used between his bed and the door to avoid any chance of a draught reaching him when the door was open. A screen that was one of the prized possessions of King Edward was substituted for the screen first put up in the room.

This screen is a four-fold one made of rosewood and is completely covered with autographed photographs of bygone celebrities offered by King Edward. The screen was put in King George's bedroom as it was thought it would interest him to look at it.

The screen has an interesting history of its own. King Edward, near

Who Pays For Advertising?

The following article will be of special interest to those who believe that advertising adds to the cost of selling:

It is amazing how few people — even busy business men — know the fundamental principles of advertising, and yet there is not a business that is not in some way directly or indirectly seriously affected by advertising.

Other will argue that advertising adds to the cost of selling. Successful salesmen sometimes argue that the firm's advertisement came out of their salary—"just as if they would draw more money if their firm did not advertise. The opposition that some salesmen feel toward advertising is basically the same as the opposition of the unthinking mechanic toward labor-saving machinery. Advertised products sell more easily and more often than non-advertised products. Advertising not only sells goods, it increases the volume of individual purchases and speeds turnover.

business come out of profits and sales from vast volume of sales—therefore, if the profit is not there, then the profit per unit sales is proportionately smaller. The following appeared in Personnel Publicity, under the heading: "The low murmur of his pupils' cries, coming over their lessons, may be heard on a drowsy summer day like the hum of a beehive, or the low murmur of the sea." The creative voice of the master in tone of menace or command, or adventure, by the appealing sound of the sea, as urged comes fairly early about the twenty path of guidance.

"Hans Van Houten, who pays for advertising" asked the famous pedagogue, "what is the secret?"

"The manufacturer," sir.

"Proceed to the foot of the chain; are wrong."

"Yes," Katsenbojen, who was advertising?

"The retailer, Mr. Crane."

IT IS A PRETTY CUSTOM Good old St. Valentine, who died a martyr in Rome many centuries ago, after acting as a guardian over the celebration of his day to keep it from modern dilettantes. Little or no attempt has been made to modernize the custom old anniversary used to lovers.

For weeks the stores have been displaying the pretty little tokens of love, and the custom of sending them has become a habit with lovers' gifts for generations. Even the delicate love creations so dear to the hearts of women and children, and the little tokens of love, which are so dear to the hearts of men, are now being sent in great numbers.

Instead of being "jazzed up" to meet the spirit of our age, St.
Valentine's Day has become more modernized. The gifts, sometimes made of cardboard, known as "romantic valentines" have almost disappeared. These valentines will reappear the day when we will renew the day when to cherish only the tenderest emotions.

Of course for those who would make a gift of a modern valentine
